Service and Advocacy Groups Sue Trump Admin for Scrapping Requirements That Protected Social Service Recipients' Religious Freedom and Access to Services

For more on the lawsuit, click here.

The coalition issued the following statements upon filing:

“As Jews and as Americans, we are deeply offended and disturbed that the Trump administration promulgated a rule that as a practical matter forces Jews and other religious minorities to give up their freedom to worship as they choose in order to get food. The Trump administration has essentially licensed religious discrimination against some of our nation’s most vulnerable people. Even on the last day of this tumultuous presidency, we will not allow this to happen. Now, more than ever before, the millions of Americans facing hunger in the wake of COVID-19 must not be forced to withstand one more barrier to seeking the assistance they need to feed themselves and their families.”

MAZON: A Jewish Response to Hunger
Abby J. Leibman, President & CEO

---

“The Trump administration’s perversion of religious freedom has continued till, literally, its last day. We’re determined to ensure that individuals not believing in the majority creed know their rights and are empowered to protect themselves against discrimination and marginalization while receiving vital social services.”

Freedom From Religion Foundation
Annie Laurie Gaylor, Co-President

---

“Religious groups paid by the federal government to provide services must provide them with no strings attached—not hold them out as a carrot for participating in religious worship. This is an attack on the religious freedom of millions of people in need, and particularly on the third of Americans who do not identify with a religion. No one should be subjected to religious coercion to receive federal benefits. This challenge will empower recipients of benefits to protect their own religious freedom.”

American Atheists
Nick Fish, President

---

“We refuse to allow the Trump administration to make it any easier to discriminate against LGBT elders as they head out the door. Many of our community’s elders rely on federally funded providers for essential services – SAGE is joining this lawsuit to ensure that they’re not victimized in the process.”

SAGE

---

“The Trump administration failed to follow the law and provide a sufficient legal justification for its rollback of these important requirements, which protected vulnerable populations’ religious freedom and access to taxpayer-funded social services. On its final full day in power, the Trump administration has once again put its harmful agenda ahead of the law and those most in need of help.”

Democracy Forward
Robin Thurston, Managing Senior Counsel

---

“When providing social services, our federal government’s top priority should be to ensure that vulnerable people get the help they need without sacrificing their religious freedom or civil rights. The Trump administration’s unlawful rules do the opposite – they strip critical protections from people who rely on social services and force people to choose between obtaining services they desperately need and remaining true to their personal religious beliefs and identities. Religious freedom should never be misused to permit discrimination or create barriers for people seeking taxpayer-funded services. We urge the court to invalidate these rules, and the Biden-Harris administration to promptly revoke them.”

Americans United for Separation of Church and State
Rachel Laser, President and CEO

“It’s outrageous and alarming that the Trump administration, on its way out of town and in the midst of a raging pandemic, cannot resist one last shot at key nondiscrimination protections across no less than nine federal agencies that serve people in crisis. This last gasp effort yet again privileges religion and religious institutions over the needs of LGBTQ people, seniors, youth who are survivors of trafficking, survivors of interpersonal violence, and other vulnerable populations that our publicly funded programs are intended to serve, and who need these services to survive and thrive. This shameful Trump administration rule change will severely impair the ability of these community members to know their rights and obtain sometimes life-saving services.

This is the 46th lawsuit we have had to file against the Trump administration to block its obsessive, lawless efforts to create ever-greater free passes for religious entities and to target refugees, communities of color, women, and LGBTQ people.”
